Headline:

Cloudy start. Sunny spells developing, but cloud persisting north Norfolk.

Today:

Cloudy start, especially along northern coasts, but also a few brighter spells. Cloud thinning more readily than on Wednesday, with sunny spells developing by the afternoon. Norfolk coastal areas likely staying rather cloudy however. Maximum temperature 20 deg C (68 deg F).

Tonight:

Clear spells at first, however cloud likely spreading south and westwards overnight. Clear spells persisting across some southeastern areas, leading to a chilly feel, with the odd mist patch possible. Minimum temperature 11 deg C (52 deg F).

Friday:

Another cloudy start for many, before brighter or warm sunny intervals develop. The best of these will again be across southeastern parts, whilst some Norfolk coasts will likely stay cloudy. Maximum temperature 21 deg C (70 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:

Cloudy but mostly dry start Saturday, with sunny spells developing. Winds strengthening Sunday, staying dry with warm sunny spells. Low confidence Monday, but likely dry, breezy, with warm sunny spells.
